

ABSTRACT

A media provider, including a job-control master computer system which manages duplication jobs via directing each duplication job to a processing job queue of a particular recording cluster; and a plurality of media file clusters each containing a media file master server, a processing job queue, a job recording queue and at least one media-recording client; the media file master server obtaining a duplication job from the processing job queue, acquiring files for the duplication job and transferring such information to the recording queue, the media recording client retrieving a duplication job and duplicating the consumer defined collection of files and/or uniquely modified or newly created set of files together with the unique digital identification number on a recording medium.